Scenario: Setting up a career path

A. Aron, a student at UNC Charlotte, wants to apply for a job at Company INC. in the summer but he does not meet all of the requirements needed to get hired and is recommended Lockdown Calendar by his school adviser. A. Aron downloads Lockdown Calendar and looks up the job application there. He finds the job posting and the app automatically sets up a schedule to complete the requirements in a set time period. From there, Lockdown Calendar reminds him of when he needs to complete a requirement so that he will be ready to apply by the time that was set. It even helps him balance school work and job application material. A. Aron uses the app's lockdown functionality to keep himself from getting distracted while he works on time-sensitive assignments.

Bill Ross, an employer at Company INC., is looking to get more people to apply for his open positions. He gets a call from the Lockdown Calendar team telling him about how their app helps people looking for jobs discover and apply for jobs. Bill Ross signs up and posts his job listing through the easy to use dashboard. He can keep track of how many people are on track to apply for his listing. One day he gets an application from a student named A. Aron who used the app to balance his heavy school workload and the job application process.

Bethany Austen, an adviser at UNC Charlotte, wants to help a student apply for a job at Company INC. She heard from a colleague about a service she uses called Lockdown Calendar. It allows her to look at her student's progress not only in school but also in the job application process with an easy to use UI. If the student falls behind schedule, she can remind them and suggest ways to help them stay on track. Bethany Austen helps her student, A. Aron, sign up and follows his progress throughout the process.
